COURSE DESCRIPTION

This team-taught course introduces students to some of the experiences, cultural beliefs, values and voices shaping contemporary Africa. The course forges students' critical capacity to resist simplistic popular understandings of what is taking place in the continent and works to refocus our attention on distinctively "African Perspectives." We study the impact of environmental, cultural and socio-political diversity as well as how the politics of ethnicity, religion, age, race and gender influence interactions and relationships in daily life. Via a series of faculty lectures, including some from guest scholars, we will examine case studies concerning Algeria, Ghana, Kenya, Nigeria, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, South Africa, and Tunisia. We investigate historical patterns and current structures to understand how they configure Africans’ options and responses to events and ongoing processes shaping their societies. Doing so enables us to take seriously African perspectives on justice, human rights, as well as the contours of and paths to renewal. Students contribute to learning in the course through research to augment their and the class’ knowledge about a specific issue within a particular region.
INDS100 is primarily for first and second year students with little critical knowledge about Africa, and is cross-listed in Anthropology, Education, French, and Politics. It serves as the introduction to Bates’ General Education Concentration (GEC) “Considering Africa” (GEC 022). It can be counted toward GECs “Knowledge, Action and Public Good” (C091), “Culture and Meaning” (C026), “French and Francophone Studies” (C034), “Identity, Race, and Ethnicity” (C037).

COMMUNITY ENGAGED LEARNING

Students Planning to Apply INDS 100 toward a minor in educational studies or the General Education Concentration “Knowledge, Action, and the Public Good” (C091) will need to meet the following criteria:

• complete a community engaged learning placement of at least 15 hours at an assigned local school or educational organization. [Education Interns help to coordinate placements and will provide guidance and support to fellow Batesies at the placement sites. Ellen Alcorn from the HCCP will coordinate placement logistics (ealcorn@bates.edu)];
• complete their group research projects on an education related topic of their choice. [They will work with Patti Buck in the development of these projects];
• add an additional 2 pages to each of their Making Connections papers. [The additional pages will allow students to document and reflect on occurrences at their placement site. Students are encouraged to make connections between other course material and their placements as well as to explore questions and concerns related to education as a field of study and/or practice. Students’ journals will be submitted to Patti as indicated on the syllabus.]

LEARNING GOALS

Upon completion of the course, students will:

• be familiar with the rich diversity of African environments, histories, cultures, and social systems;
• recognize the complexity of forces shaping ideological systems, political and economic structures, and social processes in a variety of settings;
• be practiced at locating a variety of African voices on issues of the day occurring within a country, on the continent, or around the globe;
• those who complete community engaged learning projects will be able to make conceptual connections between their work with local community members of African descent and other course material.
In addition, students will develop and refine skills that enable them to:

- read new materials with critical attention to their origins and purpose;
- develop astute questions for studying cultural processes, social interactions, and different (and related) sets of power relations;
- investigate and demonstrate knowledge of an important issue to a non-specialist but curious audience;
- think critically about the role of experientially derived knowledge in the study of African perspectives.

APPROACH

This course was developed by a team of faculty with keen interest in African Studies. While one faculty member (this year, Patti Buck) takes the lead for conducting the course and coordinating class logistics throughout the semester, each member of the faculty team contributes. In addition, other scholars who study Africa through the lenses of their own academic disciplines will make presentations to the class. Students are expected to work in groups throughout the semester to develop a major presentation, and will be asked from time to time in class to assemble in small groups to review materials. With many contributors to learning, this course is broadly collaborative.

Similarly, the classroom is a shared space where everyone is expected to assume responsibility for the learning that takes place here. The quality and vitality of our interactions depend upon the commitment of each individual class member to prepare thoroughly for class, engage actively with others, and respond with discussion and feedback. Use the texts, materials and discussions to deepen your curiosity; and, remember that it is valuable to be curious and thoughtfully engaged. We invite you to share your curiosity, observations, and questions because they will offer additional paths to learning about the subject and will help us achieve the learning goals.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS:

- All readings and some videos will be posted to Lyceum. Some films are on reserve in Ladd Library.

- Assignments are listed on the day they are due.

- Attendance is expected at every class session. Any student missing more than two sessions without a dean’s excuse will fail. Please note class session meeting dates and plan your break travel accordingly. If you are sick – especially if you are afflicted with something contagious – do not come to class, get a dean’s... excuse. Obviously, be sure to get notes, handouts and other materials to ensure that you don’t miss anything important from that day’s class.

High participation grades come with good attendance and active, thoughtful, consistent class participation, revealing thorough preparation and engagement. Remember that consistent attention to the ‘African Perspectives’ of our course title is essential for success on this front.

- A-level work means contributing your own ideas as well as providing constructive responses to others’ oral and written comments.
- B-level work means that your participation is of high quality, but not consistent, or you share your own ideas frequently, but may not pay much attention to others’ comments.
- You would receive C-level grades if your participation were thoughtful but infrequent, or regular but perfunctory, yet still revealed a satisfactory level of preparation and competence when offered.

- Students will work together to research, design and develop a Poster Presentation at either the Mount David Summit or the annual Education Symposium.

- Assignments include:
  - A map quiz to be held in class; a study guide will be provided in advance.
  - Three two-page (four pages for Education students) Making Connections Papers:
    - A semester long research project culminating in a poster presentation at either the Mount David Summit on April 3 or the Education Symposium on April 8.

- Each and every assignment must be completed to pass INDS 100. Assignments must be turned in on time in class on the day they are due. Late submissions may be accepted if permission is granted from the lead instructor, Patti Buck.

- If you have a documented Learning Difference, please let Patti Buck know as soon as possible. Faculty will work with the Dean of Students office to ensure that you have what you need to do your best in the course.

- If something is unclear, it is your responsibility to seek clarification. Do not hesitate to ask.
RESOURCES

In order to assist you in gaining insight into “African Perspectives” on course issues, we have included links on the Lyceum page to several RSS feeds from African media sources. In addition, you should consult the “Resources for African Studies” list early and often as you prepare for class discussions and various assignments. You will find www.allafrica.com and www.africa.com helpful.

CLASSROOM ETIQUETTE

We expect you to remain in the classroom during the entire session out of respect for lecturers. Be sure to attend to your personal needs before class.

Computers, cell phones, tablets and other electronic devices are not allowed to be open during class meeting times. When you enter class, please turn your cell phone and other devices off. If you use one of these during a class session, you will be warned; if you do so again, you will be asked to leave and counted as absent.

Once or twice during the semester, we may ask you to bring your laptops to a class session for use in a specific exercise. That is the only time when computer use during class time will be allowed. You will be notified in advance when we want you to bring your laptops.

COURSE POLICIES

Patti Buck is the lead instructor for the 2014 course. While the faculty team will assess student work, the lead instructor will handle all inquiries and decisions about classroom and course logistics (posting readings, collecting assignments, adjusting dates, receiving Dean’s excuses, etc.). Please see Patti Buck if you have any questions, want clarification or assistance, wish to make suggestions, or discuss anything related to the class.

Patti Buck is happy to discuss the course and course topics with you and especially as they relate to the education studies minor and community engaged learning. (See top of the syllabus for office locations and hours.)

Elizabeth Eames is the point person for all questions related to logistics of poster presentations at either the Education Symposium or Mount David.

- Once or twice during the semester, you will be required to attend an evening lecture by a visiting artist or scholar, or attend a film screening and meet a filmmaker. You will receive advance notice for these events. We consider the class fortunate to be able to book these experts and expect all students to attend.
• The class email list is winds100a@lists.bates.edu. Announcements, discussions outside of class, posting of supplemental materials, etc. can be found here. Check the list regularly and feel free to post news items, ideas, questions, tips, etc.

Plagiarism will not be tolerated. Period.

Work submitted for this course must be your original effort. Any ideas or arguments from another person or source must be properly cited. Plagiarism (or other forms of cheating) will be grounds for failure of the course. Ignorance of proper citation is no excuse for unethical conduct. You are urged to review the college’s policy on plagiarism and academic misconduct. And, consult staff at Writing at Bates if you are uncertain about when and how to cite a reference.
